Relief and sleep will follow the second or third doses. Lag. Sold by all Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Residence. Coming from very important personages —in many cases from royalty, from Cardinals and Bishops, Princes and Dukes cading politicians, and sometimes mough ands or spies, the replies have to be carefully worded to suit the person addressed. Great caution has to be observed that not only the tone may please the party to receive the letter, but also that the Emperor may be satisfied with it; and herein lies the great difficulty of the Chef. At times, like all other mortals, his Majesty is morose, hard to please, and then the labors of the Chef are onerous. He has the relative satisfaction, however, of turning his pent-up discontent upon the attaches, and these in turn attack the ushers.

On these dark days the people who come to the "Cabinet de l'Empereur" by ap-pointment, find it no pleasant place. At other times they are charmed with the po-lite manner and condescension of the white-erayated, brown-uniformen misier The Chef not only has letters to answer; he must sort the dispatches from the Min-isters of War, Foreign Affairs, Navy and Finance. Also the reports from the Pre-fect of Police, and lastly, the printed slips containing extracts from the English, Spanish, German, Austrian, Russian, Ital-1.583,163 ian and American journals. The Empe 361,000 ror insists in looking over all these, or a any rate the most important, and upon this the Chef must decide. He cannot slight this part of his duty. Were he found doing so he would lose the confilence of the Emperor. Of course all this equires time, so the Chef comes to his reau" at seven in the morning, winter enkfasts at the Imperial table, and is en at liberty until five in the afternoon, when he returns to the palace and remains til seven in the evening. The Sous Chef is more an ornament than And other Elegant Styles Worsted Dres a useful member of the Cabinet. He is Goods. enerally a person of distinction, supposed to be necessary because he draws a salary, but in reality he does nothing except in case of the illness of the Chef, when for the time assumes, ostensibly, the position, the work being done by the attaches. The Sous Chef, in fact, has a sinecure.

The Emperor is disinclined to admit to many persons into the secrets of the "Cab-net," so the Chef and attaches are alone llowed access to the correspondence. To scure the fidelity of the latter personages Offer this day, liberal salaries and many decorations are bestowed upon them; but even they are kept but partially in the confidence of the Sovereign. The cipher used by his spies, near the thrones of Europe, or that used by eminent political people who corres-pond with his Majesty, are never revealed to a third party, the Emperor and Chef alone being able to make out the real meaning of such dispatches.

Herein, sgain, the power and influence of the Chef are augmented. Knowing the most secret resolve of his master, he is aware of the ultimate disposal of impor-tant questions, of prominent men, and can act according to his future benefit and that of his followers and favorites, by whom he is of course ever surrounded. A hint rom the Chef will often enrich those whom he chooses to give it to, and he at the same time can fill his own purse, a REAL fact proved by the immense fortune accuplated in a few years by the late Chef du Cabinet, Jean Constant Mocquard, whom I mentioned in the commencement In a lesser degree the two attaches are powerful and influential. They have or-ders to throw aside such letters and petitions as seem to them trivial or absurd. There are many such, and they may, where personal interest leads to it, or anger and spite prompt them, set aside let ers and petitions more important. They are allowed to open these not marked in such a manner that none but the Emperor the Chef may break that seal, and acrdingly they are courted and made much A promise to further a suit to his Majesty by one of the attaches is eagerly sought after, as they may in reality do much in aid of the petitioner by giving prominence to his case.

As I said before the parties forming the Cabinet of the Emperor accompany him wherever he may be, couriers, active and zealous, have charge of the mails for his majesty, and in no instance will he consent to be without his daily batch of letters and papers. Even when on a pleasure trip, or out shooting, if he is to remain more than a day, he is accompanied by a member of the Cabinet, and re $ 255, 143 eceives their reports and documents. Dur-414,729 ing the Italian war, and in all his grand 254,501 tours through the december of the life 254,534 425,244 pire, or during his voyages to Algier, the functions of the Cabinet were never its real direction was presided over by th Emperor, through his Chef and attaches of his Private Cabinet. Fatigued by a long days journey or the active supervis-ion of a great and botly contested battle, the Emperor did not retire to rest until ne had gone through the routine of the luties of his Cabinet. He inspected the ietters pronounced important by the Chef, agreed with the latter as the answers to be made, despatches sent; in short, each day he attended regularly to his self-impoied task. Thus your readers will understand that through the constant personal attention of his Majesty, the Private Cabinet may be looked upon as
